

Student

1. What instrument do you play?

I play piano. It's the most common instrument at the school so there are quite a few of us, and from what I understand every studio has a piano in it, so that side of things has never really been a problem for me.

2. What's your current process for adjusting or rescheduling your 30-minute lesson, and how would you prefer to do it in the system?

Right now if I need to move a lesson, I email the school or message the manager directly and ask if there's another slot that week. Then I have to wait for them to check with my teacher and get back to me, which can take a day or two, and sometimes the slot I wanted is already gone by the time they reply.

In the new system I'd prefer to just log in, see the open slots my teacher has that week, and request a change myself without having to go back and forth over email. Even if it still needs the manager or teacher to approve it, being able to submit the request and see the status would save a lot of waiting.

3. Can you describe how you find out about the weekly 30-minute lesson timings?

At the moment I usually just get told my timing when I first enrol, and it mostly stays the same each week. If anything changes for a particular week the school lets me know by email or a message. It's not always super clear ahead of time, so occasionally I'm not fully sure of my slot until close to the day.

Ideally I'd like to be able to just check my own schedule in the system and see my lesson timing for the week without having to ask anyone.

4. Do you typically get your first choice in timeslot?

Not always. Since I'm at school in the day, I usually want an evening or weekend slot, and those are the popular ones so they fill up fast. I normally get something workable, but not always the exact time I asked for. If I could see what's actually available before I commit, I think I'd end up happier with the slot I get.

5. How often do you book classes?

I have one lesson a week, so it's a regular weekly thing rather than something I book fresh each time. The main time I actually need to do anything is when I want to reschedule a particular week or when the school sorts out the new month's timings. So it's not that I'm booking constantly, it's more that I want the weekly slot to be reliable and easy to change when something comes up.

6. Do you typically struggle to find a studio for your instrument?

No, not really. Because piano is in every studio, there's usually a room free for me as long as a teacher is available at that time. From what I've seen, the harder part is teacher availability at the timing I want, not the studio itself. I think it would be different for the drums students since only one studio has a drum kit, but for piano it hasn't been an issue.

Communication & Preferences

7. What device do you typically use to check your schedule?

Mostly my phone. I'll quickly check on my phone when I'm out or between classes, so it would be good if the system works properly on mobile and isn't only meant for a laptop. I do use a laptop sometimes at home, but the phone is what I reach for day to day.

8. Would you find it useful to see your teacher's availability and pick a slot, or do you prefer to be assigned a time?

I'd prefer to see my teacher's availability and pick a slot myself. Being assigned a time is fine when it happens to suit me, but since my free time changes with my school schedule, I'd rather choose from the open slots so I know it actually fits. As long as I can only see and pick from times my teacher is genuinely free, that would work much better for me than waiting to be told a time and then having to ask to change it.
